Chairmans' Roundtable: Balancing the Region, Delivering Promises

Sponsored by Lee Andrews Group

The Chairs of Southern California's regional transportation agencies are tasked with the important responsibility to achieve mobility and deliver on promises to their constituents as leaders of their respective transportation agencies. From funding issues to environmental concerns, what are their biggest challenges? How is the role of the transportation agency in Southern California evolving in this brave new world of connected and autonomous vehicles and shared economy mobility providers? Hear directly from the Chairs of our regional transportation agencies as they tell us how they prioritize among a myriad of competing issues while achieving mobility and balance.

Reversing the Trends of Declining Transit Ridership

Sponsored by Stantec Consulting Services Inc.

Media and industry reports show bus transit ridership trending downward, while rail transit ridership trends upward. A proven tool to ease the crisis of traffic congestion in our region is to provide more transit opportunities. With billions of dollars of infrastructure in the works, transit agencies in Southern California and elsewhere are employing a wide variety of approaches to attract riders. Some of these efforts have borne fruit, while others are just underway. This distinguished panel of transit industry leaders will discuss both user trends at their systems, as well as the latest on what they are doing to increase ridership and the results they are seeing. Come join these experts in a candid discussion of what the future holds for transit.

From the Ports to Your Front Porch: The Changing Landscape of Logistics

Sponsored by Jacobs

From food, goods and nearly everything in between – in 2010 over 1.5 billion tons of cargo valued at almost $2 trillion moved across the region's transportation systems – an estimate only guaranteed to grow in the near future. Everything we purchase has an origin and destination with a number of steps in the process. The movement of goods thus requires a multimodal system utilizing our ports, highways, aviation and evolving technology. With the demand for more at a quicker pace, transportation and goods movement systems are moving to accommodate growth in the throughput. How do we remain competitive and support the region's economic vitality, while meeting clean air standards and ensuring the best possible quality of life?

A New Transportation Paradigm for California?

Sponsored by Cerrell Associates / Allied Universal

Now, like never before, transportation is at a crossroads. There are increasingly diverse, and sometimes conflicting, opinions about the fundamental purposes and objectives of transportation. This diversity of thought can empower us, leading to more interest, opportunities and funding. But it can also divide us, leading to fragmented advocacy and worse outcomes for transportation. This panel will discuss the latest thinking, from the regions and the state, and identify ways we can come together to influence the future of mobility and transportation in the Golden State.
